The Hidden Cost of Opportunity: Mount Kenya University's Diploma Courses and the Anatomy of Access in East African Higher Education Mount Kenya University (MKU), perched at the edge of the Aberdare Range and shadowed by the iconic snow-capped peak of Mount Kenya, stands not only as a physical landmark but as a symbolic beacon of aspiration in Kenya's evolving educational landscape. Founded in 1989 as a technical institution, MKU has undergone a strategic transformation, expanding into a comprehensive university with diploma, undergraduate, and postgraduate programs. Among its most dynamic and rapidly growing offerings are the diploma courses—structured, industry-aligned pathways designed to bridge the gap between academic theory and vocational readiness. Yet beneath the veneer of accessibility lies a complex, multilayered fee structure for these diplomas, shaped by historical policy shifts, geopolitical pressures, economic imperatives, and a deeply contested social contract around equity in education. The origins of MKU's diploma model cannot be disentangled from Kenya's broader educational reforms in the post-colonial era. In the 1980s, the Kenyan government, under pressure from international financial institutions like the World Bank, began restructuring higher education to prioritize technical and vocational training. The rationale was clear: a national economy increasingly reliant on manufacturing, agriculture modernization, and services demanded skilled labor—yet traditional universities were perceived as producing graduates too theoretically oriented, disconnected from labor market needs. The 1989 establishment of Mount Kenya Technical College (the precursor to MKU) reflected this pivot. Its early diplomas—civil engineering technology, agricultural mechanics, and nursing assistant—were explicitly designed to feed skilled workers into emerging sectors. Over time, MKU evolved beyond a technical college into a degree-granting university, but the diploma stream retained its core mission: practical, accelerated, and
